Storm Update 6 / September 26, 2016 / 4 p.m.

Overview- Flood waters continue to recede in western Wisconsin. Most rivers and streams have crested. The National Weather Service is forecasting a few light and scattered showers, allowing the affected areas to continue drying out. County assessment teams are surveying damage to public infrastructure (roads, bridges, etc.) and giving preliminary cost estimates to repair that damage. In addition, homeowners and businesses that sustained flooding are encouraged to continue reporting damage to their county emergency management office. Many counties in Governor Walker's disaster declaration are working on these assessments and will report estimates as soon as possible. Here is the latest update by county (not all counties have reported):
